Title

Language Learning and Wellbeing in the Age of AI

Abstract

This interactive workshop explores language learner wellbeing and its implications for everyday learning experiences. Drawing on research from the University of Graz, it introduces wellbeing literacy and invites students to consider practical ways of understanding and supporting their own wellbeing as language learners. Particular attention is given to the growing role of AI, including its potential benefits and possible short- and long-term effects on learner wellbeing.

Title

Teacher and Learner Engagement: Research, Connections, and Implications for Practice

Abstract

This interactive session examines current research on language learner engagement, with particular attention to a funded project examining connections between teacher and learner engagement and among learners. Drawing on biophysical measures and longitudinal Experience Sampling Method data, it introduces emerging findings, methodological possibilities, and future directions. Participants will also consider practical implications for EMI, reflecting on how educators can better understand and sustain their own engagement and that of their students.
